Counter Intelligence In the National Capital Area

COUNTER - INTELLIGENCE

My last newsletter revealed that the real objective of special ADIZ and FRZ airspace in the National Capital Region is to spread confusion. When measured correctly against objective, it becomes apparent everything is working just perfectly!

I will now expand on those thoughts.

'Counter-intelligence' activities are actions and special programs intended to deny the enemy knowledge of our sources and methods. The icing on the cake, so to speak, comes when we can also trick our enemy into revealing their own sources and methods, without their even knowing it.

Here at Potomac Airfield, close to the headwaters of all this turmoil, we've merely applied counter-intelligence a bit more literally.

[My regular readers can probably see where this is going...]

To maximize the efficacy of our counter-intelligence activities we have removed all intelligence from all of our activities. As a matter of national security policy, should anything even begin to make sense, or have any merit at all, we make sure it goes nowhere and is stopped dead in its tracks.

By strategically removing all intelligent behavior from all our activities, we guarantee our counter-intelligence activities remain 100% effective and 100% secure.

No matter how deeply anyone digs through all the layers of public information, public mis-information, classified information, or even dis-information, behind the scenes we remain confident and secure in the knowledge that nothing intelligent is actually going on.

We meet national security policy objectives by taking measures to guarantee that everything we do is fundamentally meaningless.

Pretty clever, eh?

REVIEW: A definition of 'Strategic Defense' is 'a defense posture which makes an attacker reluctant to engage.' To maximize the efficacy of our counter-intelligence we use a similar, but less well known doctrine, 'Strategic foolishness is posture of pervasive foolishness, intended to maximize confusion.'

In brief, 'Strategic foolishness' has three components: 1. Intelligent activities that appear foolish, 2. Foolish activities that appear foolish, 3. Foolish activities that appear intelligent, but in fact are actually just foolish. When put together correctly, they create an impenetrable 'Veil of strategic foolishness.'

If any intelligence has leaked past our initial counter-intelligence activities, then it will still be swamped by our overwhelming cloud of pervasive foolishness. In this manner we are guaranteed that even intelligent activities will be taken as just more foolishness, will be totally ignored, and thus remain totally secure.

On occasion, 'intelligent' foolishness and 'actual' foolishness get confused, even by those that have need to know, but they should have known better. When this happens, the intelligent foolishness gets 'canceled out' by the actual foolishness, resulting in nothing, which is totally secure.

With a well-managed campaign of 'strategic foolishness' we can say under oath that no one really knows anything, because there really is nothing to know. From a security standpoint, we are equally confident that nothing will ever be found out, because we've made sure that 'nothing' is all there is to find!

To clarify: Everything in Washington that appears intelligent is probably just foolishness disguised as intelligence; and even that which appears foolish is may be the most intelligent activity going on, even if it is just foolishness.

Part of 'counter-intelligence' includes strategies to 'compromise,' or get the bad guys to reveal themselves, without their knowing it. We use intentional disinformation and foolishness to lay the bait.

No rational person has any reason to try to figure any of this out, because fundamentally it makes no sense at all. Our trap is if we catch anyone trying to make sense of this, then we know they are highly suspect, because only someone with ulterior motives would waste their time trying to make sense out of such foolishness.

Should our exhaustive efforts fail to find anyone even trying to figure this out, then we will keep making it more complicated until sooner or later someone steps into our trap, and tries to make sense of it, then we've got them cold!

MAXIMIZING YOUR COUNTER- INTELLIGENT TAX DOLLARS

Aside from the pretty obvious counter-intelligence stuff I've explained so far, the challenge is how can we spread our foolishness efficiently? Our objective is to spread our 'strategic foolishness' as broadly and quickly as possible, with the least effort and at the lowest cost; thoroughly confusing the most number of people, in the least possible time.

The most effective and efficient way to spread foolishness is to get someone or something else already foolish to spread it for you, like a virus; these are called 'viral dupes,' or 'carriers.' The idea is to 'insert' our 'strategic foolishness' into their regular ongoing foolishness, and thus our own foolishness gets carried far and wide as they spread their own; without our having lift a finger.

What do we look for in a ‘viral dupe?’ The best ‘viral dupes’ have unbounded ignorance and arrogance. Ignorance guarantees they will enthusiastically embrace our foolishness as their own, and arrogance provides the ideal ‘propellant’ for spreading foolishness quickly, cheaply, broadly and effectively.

Now that we have correctly defined an ideal ‘viral dupe,’ where do we find such a thing? The answer should be obvious: Many government agencies already spread their own ignorance and arrogance to spread foolishness, both quickly and cheaply. The best agencies are those run amok, entirely out of control, without any oversight or accountability. Their lack of restraint allows them to spread foolishness like wildfire!

Agencies under scrutiny, accountability, or oversight are more restrained and thus less able to spread foolishness as quickly, so they are less effective as ‘viral dupes.’

Washington offers plenty of agencies already spreading ignorance, arrogance, and foolishness, making them excellent candidates for distributing ‘strategic foolishness.’ Many may already be serving this role.

Eventually, we achieve a balanced ratio of ignorance, arrogance, and foolishness, both real and imagined, in the public domain, at which point we will have also achieved a critical mass of mass confusion, and the whole thing becomes self-sustaining.

Once we get a self-sustaining miasma of well-meaning government induced confusion and misinformation, this provides yet another layer of security protecting our underlying national security policy of ‘strategic foolishness.’

It’s all really quite simple.

The final ‘closeout’ phase is when the inter-agency finger-pointing gets going, which always happens, sooner or later. Once everyone has everything wrong, we no longer have to bother with the complexities and headaches of trying to manage our own campaigns of foolishness; it all takes care of itself.

I hope this hasn’t confused anyone....

To summarize: Anyone in Washington who appears to know anything is probably just plain wrong; and anyone who admits to knowing nothing is probably right, because nothing is the only thing any rational person can know.

We combine the best of these by bringing together those who are always wrong, with those who know nothing, to accomplish absolutely nothing, but at least we do it with style.

KEEPING DOWN COSTS About a month ago, a south-bound Cessna Cardinal triggered another ‘heightened alert’ in downtown Washington DC. I believe the oft used phrase was,

“Run for your lives!”

To make sure it was not one of our own, I called the National Capital Area Coordination Center (NCRCC).

[Yes, there is such a thing. I’ve suggested the NCRCC merge with the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission (MNCPPC) to become the “NCRCCMNCPPC.” But I digress...].

Ring ring ring...

I asked NCRCC, “Was it one of ours?”

NCRCC replied, “No, your Potomac guys know what they’re doing; no problems.”

I said, “Look, if you do shoot down one of our pilots, please let me know as soon as possible, I’ve got people waiting for hangars.”

Although that may seem a bit harsh to some, I’m just being practical: Every time one of our pilots gets shot down we can usually keep invoicing their estate for months, sometimes for years, while simultaneously renting their hangar to the next pilot. This business strategy allows us to leverage our assets, by renting our fixed number of hangars to an ever-increasing number of pilots all at the same time, all of whom have been shot down. By periodically getting our pilots shot down, we can guarantee space for new pilots, and reduce costs for the pilots that have not yet been shot down.

It’s all just part of the service at Potomac

PAYING OFF THE NATIONAL DEBT

I’m amazed at the stock prices of publicly-trading companies that have never had earnings, currently have no earnings, and have no hope of ever having earnings. It seems as long as their balance sheet remains anything above “0,” they have a nice website, and perhaps some pretty brochures, they get along just fine.

Well, that got me to thinking...

Instead of worrying about the national debt, let’s payoff the national debt by selling the US Government to raise cash!

Step 1: We find a thinly traded Nevada penny stock, and buy a controlling interest and all the seats on its board of directors for $100. Infuse the ‘shell company’ with the minimum cash necessary to meet the ongoing registration requirements of say, the Nevada stock exchange, maybe another $100. We now have a ‘legitimate’ publicly traded company for about $200.

Step 2: We change the acquired penny stock company’s name to “The United States Government Corp,” and its symbol to ‘USG;’ which will be easy to remember for the kind of investor we are trying to attract.

Step 3: USG Corp files legitimate financial statements with the SEC by simply sending in the monthly bank statements for the $100 we have deposited at a Nevada bank. No one looks at those anyway.

Step 4: USG Corp releases vague financial statements vaguely tracking the financial condition of the US Government. In the spirit of full-disclosure, and to keep from getting our derrieres sued off, we include a disclosure statement, “USG Corp’s financial statements have no more meaning than similar statements made by the actual US Government.”

To report earnings we cite Federal taxes collected; for expenses we say whatever we feel like saying. To substantiate the value of goods and services ‘sold’ to the public, well...let’s worry about that later.

Step 5: To give the impression of liquidity to new shareholders, insiders will buy and sell stock back and forth to each other at arbitrary prices, giving whatever impression we want.

Step 6: When the market value of USG gets large enough, we approach the Chinese and Australian banks holding most of the national debt and offer to swap all of their discounted treasury bonds for USG stock

Hold on, this could work! Nobody’s even done it before... at least I don’t think so...
